What can drive a rich man’s son or a devoted family man to terrorism? What can lead a group of idealistic college students or a western democracy to embrace political violence? McCauley and Moskalenko will present Friction, a book about how radicalization happens to them and us. Friction identifies twelve mechanisms of radicalization to answer some important questions: Is there a conveyor belt to terrorism? How can religion contribute to terrorism? What signs and symptoms can be used to identify danger of radicalization? Bring your own question!

*Based on the book, Friction: How Radicalization Happens to Them & Us

Presented by:

Sophia Moskalenko
Research Associate, Solomon Asch Center for the Study of Ethnopolitical Conflict, Bryn Mawr College

Clark McCauley
Rachel C. Hale Professor of Sciences & Mathematics and Co-Director of the Solomon Asch Center for the Study of Ethnopolitical Conflict, Bryn Mawr College

Comments by:

Arif Alikhan
Distinguished Professor of Homeland Security & Counterterrorism, National Defense University, College of International Security Affairs

May 25, 2011
2:30 pm - 4:00 pm
refreshments and books for sale at 2:00 pm

National Press Club
First Amendment Lounge, 13th Floor
529 14th Street Northwest
Washington D.C., DC 20045
http://press.org/
Refreshments will be provided.